Abstract of the Disclosure

1 2

A method of reconstructing an original block of data, such as a recording of a song, from two or more clips or instances of the song, by locating and identifying overlapping sub-clips in respective clips and merging them to create a new version of the original block. The new version can be superior to any of the clips, by culling the best pieces from each. Partial clips can be used, as can damaged or defective clips.